Fort Collins vicinity, Larimer County

Discovered in 1924, this was the first recognized and investigated campsite in the country where early man (the Folsom culture) had lived and worked. It was investigated from 1934 to 1940 by ethnologists from the Smithsonian Institution and the Colorado Museum of Natural History. Its two components, a campsite and a kill site, have provided glimpses into the life of the early hunters (9000-3000 B.C.) and have been of incalculable importance in developing archeological concepts.
